ASLE News
A Quarterly Publication of the Association for the Study of Literature and Environment

In This Issue
- New ISLE Features
- ASLE Bookshelf
- ISLE and OUP
- "Island Time" Update
- 2009 Election Results
- Notes from the Managing Director
- ASLE Mentoring Program
- The Graduate Student Page
- EASLCE Update
- OSLE-India Update
- Collecting Terra Firma

---

Quick Links
- Calls for Papers
- Calls for Manuscripts
- Conference 2009
- About ASLE
- ISLE Journal

---

New ISLE Features
> More issues! ISLE has gone to quarterly publication to accommodate increased

---

ISLE Finds a New Home at OUP

ASLE and Oxford University Press (OUP) have entered into an exciting new partnership. Since its inception in 1993, ISLE—the official journal of the organization—has been published with the assistance of the University of Nevada Press. Now, thanks to our new affiliation with OUP, the journal has a permanent home.

"In a sense, we've self-published the journal," says Scott Slovic, ISLE editor and long-time ASLE advisory board member. "For several years now, we've felt that in order to make the journal sustainable we should really try to find an academic press that could help us with some of the aspects of the journal—particularly production, marketing, and distribution—that we were not well prepared to manage ourselves."

Working with George Hart, an executive council member and former acting editor of ISLE, Slovic began contacting a few publishers. Once he and Hart spoke with Trish Thomas, executive editor for humanities and social science journals at OUP, they knew they had found the perfect press.

"I was immediately impressed by her and by the array of services OUP could offer the entire community of ISLE's contributors and readers," said Slovic.

Chief among these is the wide distribution of the journal in paper and electronic formats, along with the increase from two to four issues per year.

"It has long been our dream to make ISLE available in both paper and electronic formats and to facilitate access to the journal for the many scholars outside of North America who are working in the field of ecocriticism—OUP is already helping us to achieve this."

Slovic said the efficiency and flexibility of OUP's manuscript receiving system, along with the Advanced Access System (which displays accepted and edited manuscripts even before they are placed in a specific issue) were also big advantages at this press—along with the friendly and highly competent staff.

"All of us who work on ISLE are thrilled to be working together with our colleagues at OUP. I view this new relationship as a major step forward for the journal—and for the entire discipline of ecocriticism," says Slovic.

According to Thomas, the feeling is mutual.

"Speaking for myself as well as for my colleagues at Oxford University Press, I can say that we are very pleased and excited to begin a publishing partnership with ASLE and for ISLE to join the Oxford Journals list beginning this year. We think the benefits will be mutual -- not only will ISLE broaden and strengthen the Oxford journals list, but the journal's new electronic platform and our planned marketing and consortia efforts will heighten the profile of ISLE and increase..."
submissions and a growing interest in the field.

> Online features and capabilities: take a look at www.isle.oxfordjournals.org and:

* See the Winter 2009 issue online; download in PDF or HTML format;
* Click on "Advance Access" and see the articles that will be included in future issues posted online in final form—considered the official date of publication;
* Browse the online archive back to volume one, number one (1993);
* Enter search terms to locate topics, article titles, and authors in ISLE;
* Sign up at the link for free "Alerting Services" on the journal's homepage for e-mail alerts (which will let you know when a new issue has been posted and list the table of contents), CiteTrack, or RSS feeds;
* Fill out a subscription recommendation form to e-mail to your local librarian;
* Click on the "Submit now" link to electronically submit your article to be considered for publication in the journal.

What's Not on the Program for "Island Time"
by Dan Philippon

One of the first lessons any student of literature learns is to "read between the lines," to consider what's "in the margins," to look for the absences, erasures, and omissions in a text. In that spirit, I want to call your attention to something that is not on the program for ASLE's upcoming biennial conference in Victoria but that nonetheless will be vital to the conference's success.

As I indicated in the Fall 2008 issue of ASLE News, this year we tried hard to build more time into the program for conversation, dialogue, and discussion. We expanded the concurrent sessions from 75 to 90 minutes, increased the time between sessions to 30 minutes, and extended the lunch time to 90 minutes and the dinner time to 2.5 hours. We weren't able to meet all of our goals—many sessions will have four presentations, for example, rather than our target of three—but I believe we succeeded at fulfilling the core mission the Executive Council identified at our spring retreat in Idaho: to create an intellectual and creative space where things can happen that would not happen otherwise.

What this means in practice is that the success of the conference will depend in part on what, in our wired world, has come to be called "user-generated content" (UGC). We can find you a room, make sure you are well fed and watered, make sure the plenary sessions run on time, and so forth, but in the end the success of the conference is up to you. Just as YouTube, Wikipedia, and Facebook could not survive without UGC, so too will the conference depend on what you bring to it. This has always been true for the concurrent sessions, of course, but it is especially true this year for what's not on the program: the discussion periods, coffee breaks, meal times, and many other moments of "down time."
Catherine Meeks (catherine-meeks@utc.edu).

It's a bit like college, I suppose: despite all the knowledge we share with our students in the classroom, it's their experiences outside of the classroom that often make the biggest impression. I certainly have found this to be true at all of the conferences I have attended, as the memories that loom largest for me are the smaller moments of personal interaction: the conversations with a colleague in the airport or on a bus ride, the dinners with old and new friends, the discussion periods following prepared presentations, the latest gossip (academic and otherwise) over coffee on a sunny patio.

Our task this year is not to supplant these easy exchanges-for they are vital to our lives as teachers, scholars, artists, and activists-but to augment them, to enhance them with a new sense of urgency about the environmental and critical challenges we face. As you will see, many of our plenary sessions this year will be dialogues, and we have crafted these quite intentionally to model the kind of conversations we believe this moment requires: human conversations held face-to-face (or "F2F" in the current lingo) that not only address questions of meaning, purpose, and value but that also seek solutions to our most pressing environmental and cultural problems, particularly those that involve climate change, social justice, and the economic and technological transformations now reshaping our world.

Every generation believes it lives at a moment of great historical consequence, and to some extent every generation does. Our goal for ASLE's gathering in Victoria is simply to rise to the occasion of our own particular moment by thinking deeply about "the fate of place in a wired, warming world" as only ASLE can do, and by doing so not only in the plenary and concurrent sessions but also in the margins of the program and even off the page if needed. Please join me and the rest of the Executive Council as we try to answer Bill McKibben's challenge to us in Spartanburg; that if we are going to travel to a conference in a time of climate crisis, we should "make it count." I hope to see you in Victoria as we respond to Bill's challenge with "Island Time."

A reminder: Canadian law requires that all persons entering Canada carry both proof of citizenship and proof of identity. U.S. travelers, in particular, should bring their passports, no matter what method of transport they are using, because they will need them to return to the U.S. After June 1, all U.S. travelers ages 19 and older arriving into the U.S. by land or sea from Canada must show a passport or one of several federally approved IDs to enter. (Travelers entering by air from Canada have needed passports since early 2007.) For more information, see http://travel.state.gov/passport/ and http://www.cbsa.gc.ca/noncan-eng.html.

2009 ASLE Election Results

by Catherine Meeks

As spring slowly but surely makes its way across the country, ASLE can look forward to a season of exciting new voices in its leadership. The recent ASLE election cycle saw, as usual, a wonderful and diverse array of individuals offering to serve the organization in a variety of roles. After the votes were counted (which was, for the first time, a primarily online process), Annie Merrill Ingram of Davidson College was named Vice President, and Chia-ju Chang of Brooklyn College and Amy Patrick of Western Illinois University were elected to serve on the Executive Council. These three newly elected leaders, as well as the newly appointed Graduate Student Liaison Sarah Jaquette Ray of the University of Oregon, all bring new energy as well as important experiences to ASLE.

Ingram, a Professor of English in the piedmont of North Carolina, gives to ASLE a unique perspective on the importance of coupling on-the-ground work toward environmental sustainability with scholarly and creative pursuits. As she puts it, the small, liberal arts college where she teaches is located "smack-dab in the middle of some of the most rampant development in the country," in the so-called "research triangle" near Charlotte, N.C.

Living in the midst of such development has made her aware of the great challenges of incorporating an ethic of environmental responsibility into one's work. To that end, Ingram has, in her words, "advocated for increased education for sustainability in the academic curriculum and in a range of co-curricular settings."

Ingram has past experience serving as a member of the ASLE leadership—from 2000-2004 she was the organization’s Secretary-Treasurer—and she will now be working closely with current president Dan Philippon and immediate past president Rochelle Johnson as she begins her term. She has noted that the Executive Council's goals established last fall during the early stages of strategic planning for the organization's future are "both sound and ambitious," and she looks forward to helping ASLE "maintain our current successes" as well as "increase our public presence and improve how we serve our members."

"One of many things I love about ASLE is that we're a friendly, welcoming, fun bunch of folks," Ingram said, noting that "we will need all this good energy and more in the time ahead." Thus, while she approaches her role with high hopes for the future, she recognizes the challenges of the times, too. One way she plans to meet those challenges is through reaching out to incorporate even more voices into ASLE's membership: "We need to inspire others—especially those who will diversify the organization, both demographically and discipline-wise—to join us in our endeavors."

Notes from the Managing Director

by Amy McIntyre

It has been an incredibly busy and productive year for ASLE, even without having to put on a big conference. We launched a newly redesigned and upgraded web site early last summer, and hopefully you have been finding it useful. My work to transfer the copious amounts of information from our old site continues slowly but surely. We are also about to enjoy the fruits of the Executive Committee's labors to find a better way to publish ISLE and add an online version. As most of you know, Oxford University Press will be putting out four issues of the journal beginning this year, giving you more of the latest scholarship and creative writing in the field (check out the full story in this issue of ASLE News).

Our strategic plan is nearly finished and will help guide our projects and new initiatives in the coming years. ASLE has also had a successful financial year, marking the first non-conference year since I have been with the organization that we were able to balance our budget. The reason for this is that our membership numbers did not experience the decrease they historically have in a non-conference year. This bodes well for the future financial and organizational strength of the organization, and is therefore worth noting. For detailed information on the 2008 fiscal year, see http://www.asle.org/site/about/ finances/.

I look forward to seeing many of you, members old and new, in Victoria in June!

ASLE Mentoring Program Activities in Victoria

by Mark C. Long

The ASLE Mentoring Program, a cornerstone of ASLE's community-building efforts since the inception of our organization, continues to bolster the strong sense of community that ASLE members find so invigorating and meaningful. At this summer's conference in Victoria, the program will be offering two mentoring opportunities.

Individual Mentoring Meetings: The Mentoring Program and the Graduate Student Caucus will once again co-sponsor one-on-one professional mentoring meetings with experienced
ASLE Emeritus

Longtime ASLE member Jeri Pollock has retired after a long and varied international career in education. She has been affiliated with Our Lady of Mercy School, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil (K-12) since 1991, serving as a curriculum coordinator and educational consultant. She has also developed and taught environmentally themed sections of Freshman Composition and Literature and Composition in recent years at Moorpark College, Pepperdine University, and College of the Canyons, all in California. Jeri has been active throughout her career in ESL teaching and programs for study abroad, and is fluent in Portuguese, having spent many years living in Brazil. Many of you know her as our “list mother” for ASLE’s active list-serv, and while retired from teaching she is still actively filling this role for us! We thank and commend Jeri for her work in the field.

Many thanks to our outgoing GSL, Paul Bogard, for his two years of service to the ASLE Executive Council. We look forward to Paul’s continued involvement with graduate student initiatives as he helps to facilitate the pre-conference graduate workshop at the 2009 Biennial Conference and participates as a speaker on the publications panel.

2009 Conference Plans

We hope that many of you are registered to attend the upcoming ASLE Conference in Victoria. We have numerous professionalization and networking opportunities planned for graduate students.

> On Tuesday, June 2, a pre-conference workshop with Mike Branch will allow grad students to gain practical experience and advice in preparing for the job market. We will discuss issues such as when to go on the market and how to define the scope of your search. We will also discuss how to make the most of ecocritical and interdisciplinary areas of specialization when applying for jobs, and we will attempt to demystify the application and interview processes. There are still seats available in this workshop, so please join us. To enroll, email Dan Philippon at danp@umn.edu.

> On Wednesday, June 3, the professionalization panel entitled “Finding Your Niche: Thoughts on Negotiating the Job Market” will provide further insights on the current ecocritical job market.

> On Thursday, June 4, the professionalization panel “Finding Your Audience: Insights on Publishing” will acquaint graduate students with a range of opportunities to publish scholarly and creative work.

> A graduate student reception following the professionalization panel on June 3 will give graduate students a chance to meet, mingle, and continue the conversation begun during the panel. We also hope to organize some breakfast discussions for graduate students. Please watch for these events in your conference program.

The Graduate Student Page

by Angela Waldie & Sarah Jaquette Ray

New Graduate Student Liaison

We are thrilled to introduce our newest graduate student liaison, Sarah Jaquette Ray. Sarah is a doctoral candidate at the University of Oregon in Environmental Sciences, Studies, and Policy, with English as a local department. Her research interests are interdisciplinary environmental humanities, environmental justice studies, ecocriticism, American studies, and geography.

Many thanks to our outgoing GSL, Paul Bogard, for his two years of service to the ASLE Conference, and participates as a speaker on the publications panel.
Graduate Student Paper Awards

If you are attending the Victoria conference, please consider submitting your conference paper (either in ecocriticism or environmental creative writing) for consideration in the 2009 Graduate Student Paper Awards. Winning papers will receive a prize of $100, publication in ISLE, and inclusion in the conference banquet program.

Papers must be submitted as an email attachment by May 1, 2009 to Tom Lynch at tlynch2@uni.edu. For further guidelines, please see the information regarding the Graduate Student Paper Awards on the ASLE website: http://www.asle.org/site/publications/awards/papers09/

GSL Working Group

We are always soliciting volunteers for the Graduate Student Working Group. The working group meets over email periodically to discuss issues pertinent to graduate students, plan professionalization and social opportunities for conferences, and share ideas. This is a great way to get involved with ASLE from anywhere in the world, and we look forward to having the opportunity to meet in person in Victoria. Please let us know if you’d like to join.

If you have any questions about opportunities for graduate students within ASLE or if you would like to suggest additional projects or initiatives, please contact Graduate Student Liaisons Angela Waldie (arwaldie@ucalgary.ca) and Sarah Jaquette Ray (sjaquett@uoregon.edu)

Hello from Overseas!

By Serenella Iovino, President of EASLCE
University of Turin, Italy

Many ASLE members are already acquainted with EASLCE (pronounced IZ-L-CEE), the European Association for the Study of Literature, Culture and the Environment. For those who are not, our association was founded in 2004 by a group of European and non-European scholars (Patrick Murphy and Molly Westling were among us) in order to provide a European forum for the exchange of ideas and information about ecocritical issues.

Since then, our organization has really grown up: we’ve hosted three international conferences, published two collections of essays, and also sponsored local workshops and events. Crossing the boundaries of disciplines and countries, EASLCE has expanded outside Europe, and it now includes members from India, Australia, Canada, Japan, Taiwan, Eastern Europe, South Africa, and the US.

In this process of growth, cooperation and interconnectedness are the key words. This is visible in our next projects, first of all the launch of Ecozon@: European Journal of Literature, Culture and Environment, an electronic journal intended to represent an interdisciplinary and multilingual forum for ecocriticism. Ecozon@, whose first issue is expected this fall, represents a collaboration between its founding core GIÉCO (the Spanish Grupo de investigación ecocritica-Group for Research on Ecocriticism, lead by Carmen Flys Junquera) and EASLCE.

Another big step under the sign of teamwork will be our next biennial conference. The conference, which will be hosted by the University of Bath, UK, September 1-4, 2010, will be organized by EASLCE and ASLE UK together, being the first joint-conference of the two major ecocritical associations in Europe.

Doubtlessly vital to our growth, we also look forward to reinforcing our transatlantic dialogue with ASLE. And this is why I am deeply grateful to the editors of ASLE’s Newsletter for offering EASLCE the chance of introducing itself and advertising its activities.

Many representatives of EASLCE will be in Victoria this June. All of us who will be there are looking forward to exchanging experiences, ideas, expectations, and projects. Above all, we look forward to meeting you personally, and enriching this feeling of interconnectedness also with our faces, voices, and different accents.

Ecological health flourishes through diversity, exchange and mutual awareness. May next
OSLE-India Reflects on a Busy 2008

By Rohini Ramakrishnan and Rayson K. Alex

It has been a wholesome year for OSLE-India in all its endeavors. Visits, presentations, talks and lectures have instilled in us a sense of wonder for the world we live in and has opened us to the diverse richness it offers. These dialogues have made us also aware of the rapid destruction that this world faces, if we are not quick to respond to the plight that we, as humans, are directly and indirectly responsible for.

OSLE-India has been involved in too many endeavors to list here. But some of our highlights include the first anniversary of the OSLE-India Study Circle. To celebrate the occasion, we hosted a screen of the documentary, The Queen of Trees. This past year, we also launched two activity-oriented forums: The Argument Forum, which facilitates focused research for scholars in the area of ecocriticism, and the tinai forum, which focuses exclusively on tinai (an ecoregional approach to anthropological, semiotic, political, and ecological theory). We are also proud to report that the Indian Journal of Ecocriticism (IJE) edited by R.Swarnalatha, Department of Humanities and Sciences, Indian Institute of Technology (IIT), Chennai, and published by Sarup and Sons, Delhi and OSLE-India, Chennai, is printed and ready to be sold.

Finally, OSLE-India celebrates three new PhDs, including two that are the first of their kind. K. Premkumar, Lecturer in English, Bishop Heber College has been awarded PhD by Bharathidasan University, Trichy, for his thesis entitled Symbiosis in the Schemata of Tagore's Poems. Ms. G. Ruby, Head, Department of English, Nandha Arts and Science College, Erode has been awarded the first PhD in Oikopoetics by the Bharathidasan University, Trichy. Her dissertation is entitled Poems of Robert Frost: An Oikopoetic Dimension. The researcher has tried to unearth the underlying ecological truths in Frost's poems using the Oikopoetic method. Mr. Rayson K. Alex received the first PhD in Ecocriticism from Madras Christian College for his dissertation entitled Symbiosis in the Songs of Mudugar.

Collecting Terra Firma

The Library of America is something of a lion in the world of literary anthologies. So when the organization contacted Bill McKibben with the prospect of an Environmental Writing anthology, he knew he had his work cut out for him.

After several years of research, deliberation, and discussion with writers and scholars (including several members of ASLE), he says he finally had an anthology he could be proud of. Entitled American Earth: Environmental Writing Since Thoreau, the immense volume brings together nearly 200 years of reflections on the natural world.

The Library of Congress describes the book as "an unprecedented, provocative and timely anthology that brings together much of the best that has been thought and said about the interconnectedness of the natural world, our place in it and our responsibility to it."

To do so, McKibben sought to include writers both classic and contemporary, including the likes of Henry David Thoreau, Rachel Carson, John McPhee and Sandra Steingraber. It also includes wonderfully unexpected, but no less relevant, voices such as P.T. Barnum, César Chávez, and Joni Mitchell.

For McKibben, narrowing down the list of contributors was a labor of love, but one that came with some painful decisions. "This book is a thousand pages long but it really should be 10,000 pages long. And cutting those 9,000 other pages was extremely painful for me because an awful lot of stuff that was dear to my heart got left on the cutting room floor as it were."

Still, he says he thinks the end result is a powerful collection of important voices-made all the more so by the Library of America.

"They have done a really unbelievable job of making this thing look incredibly beautiful. The amount of behind-the-scenes work that it requires to stitch together all this stuff and to get all the permissions from it is massive. They did a terrific job."

ASLE News Notes

New ASLE News Editor
ASLE News welcomes its new editor, Catherine Meeks. Catherine is a Lecturer of English at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, where she teaches undergraduate courses in rhetoric and composition and Western Humanities and explores the Tennessee River. She studied Environmental Writing while earning a Masters of Science in Environmental Studies at the University of Montana-Missoula, and continues to write creative nonfiction. Catherine will take over the helm of ASLE News beginning this summer. You can contact her at: catherine-meeks@utc.edu.

SAMLA Secretary
SAMLA (South Atlantic Modern Language Association) is looking for an ASLE member to be the Secretary for this session; the Secretary will become next year’s Chair of the session. If you are interested in serving or learning more about the post, please contact Jim Clark (jclark@barton.edu).

ASLE Emeritus
ASLE News honors those ASLE members retired or retiring from teaching. If you would like to acknowledge someone in this new feature—or if you yourself will be retiring during the coming academic year—please contact please contact Catherine Meeks (catherine-meeks@utc.edu). We will include a brief account of scholarly interests, the institutions of employment and years taught in the next newsletter.

ASLE PhDs
Have you or one of your students recently defended a dissertation? If so, ASLE News wants to know. Each issue, we include announcements commemorating those members who have recently completed their doctoral work. If you would like to be included in this feature, please contact Catherine Meeks (catherine-meeks@utc.edu) with the dissertation title, degree-granting institution, and committee members.

Register for the 2009 ASLE Biennial Conference!
June 3-6, 2009
University of Victoria, BC Canada
Register online: Click Here

Contact Info
ASLE
Amy McIntyre, Managing Director
info@asle.org
www.asle.org
Phone & Fax: 603-357-7411